2007 WAS A LOT LIKE THAT MOTORCYCLE TRIP YOU TAKE IN EARLY SUMMER IN THE MOUNTAINS — THE ONE WHERE THE FORECAST IS FOR BLUE SKIES AND DRY ROADS AND, ALL OF A SUDDEN AT 9,000 FEET OF ELEVATION, YOU FIND YOURSELF IN THE MIDDLE OF A SLEETSTORM. YOU KNOW THAT WITH CAUTION AND PERSEVERANCE YOU'LL REACH YOUR DESTINATION, BUT IN THE MEANTIME, IT'S

understanding of how to effectively serve the needs of dealers and their retail customers.

INTERNATIONAL STRATEGY A major bright spot in 2007 was the continued success of Harley-Davidson on the international stage, where dealers' retail sales grew 13.7% compared to the prior year. Our international commitment to the global market is a foundation

OUR STRONG BRAND IS THE BACKBONE OF OUR BUSINESS AND THE VALUE PROPOSITION OF OUR MOTORCYCLES. WE WILL CONTINUE TO BE CAREFUL GUARDIANS OF THE BRAND... BY MANAGING THE BUSINESS FOR THE LONG TERM."

for a disciplined and prudent approach to investing, and for the last year, the market has been a little more volatile. But we expect that 2008 HOFs also will give us a chance to invest in some of the most exciting new technologies for use in the U.S. and abroad. And although HOFs was not reticent to make some of the mistakes in the credit development and our people. We believe there will be solid opportunities to grow when the U.S. economy recovers and we intend to be well-positioned to take advantage of those opportunities.

CUSTOMER #2008 Customer relationships, not products, define Harley-Davidson. Harley-Davidson's customer experiences are the not-so-secondaries to our success. We intend to keep a finger through a combined focus on these strengths, connecting with core customers, and creating new products and services that never compromise prospects and providers but never belittle, and staying ten steps ahead of our competitors. From unmatched events like the Harley-Davidson Owners Group's annual upcoming 10th Anniversary Celebration (see www.harley-davidson.com) motorcycle search party for young adults to our Dark Custom™ family of motorcycles (direct them to www.harley-davidson.com), we continue to make our brand more relevant to more people.

TRANSFORMATION FOCUS Harley-Davidson has achieved its success over the years through the talent and dedication of our employees, growing the Company from less than $2 billion in revenue a decade ago to nearly $3 billion in 2007. Today, more than ever, having capable leaders is crucial to our success.

We are currently in the process of transforming our internal culture to maximize the talent and contribution of our existing workforce, making leadership development a key priority. And we're bringing in new capabilities for the fresh perspectives and experiences they can provide.

I want to make sure that our people — and our owners, our leaders, and all levels of the organization — are well-prepared to meet the challenges we face and to make the most of opportunities. My goal is to make sure that we are the world class when it comes to leadership. Just as we're world class when it comes to our motorcycles.

mean cover: in this letter we've doubled the size of our demo motorcycle fleet, bringing in the Harley-Davidson experience to more riders than ever. Our event team will be touring on more and better consumer events around the globe. And in July, we'll have a major injection of adrenaline with the introduction of the 2009 motorcycles.

A few weeks later, we celebrate our 100th birthday, not to mention 100 years of making history, not to mention 100 years of making you proud, with the biggest anniversary celebration in Milwaukee. With the entertainment and activities we've got in store, our 100th Anniversary Celebration will strengthen the passion of current customers and ignite the dreams of new ones like only Harley-Davidson can.

I can't think of another consumer products company that can lay claim to that level of customer activity and excitement in one year. So even though the economy has hit a rough patch, I am very enthusiastic about our customers. With the most passionate employees, customers and dealers anywhere, our powerful brand and our great motorcycles, I believe there is outstanding opportunity for Harley-Davidson throughout the world for years to come.

Famous Logos "Harley Davidson"

February 15th, 2008 by admin

Harley Davidson Logo is a symbol well known not only to motor cycle fans but also to millions of motor cycle racing enthusiasts in particular and generally among other people across the globe. The Logo of Harley Davidson extends macho image and represents strength and ruggedness.

"BAR AND SHIELD LOGO"

The Harley Davidson company started using the ever famous Bar and Shield Logo in the year 1910. Till today every Harley Davidson motorcycle that rolls out of the production plant bears the Bar and Shield Logo.

Harley Davidson logo is seen on T/shirts, belts buckles, pens, stickers etc. This shows the popularity of the Harley Davidson's brand.

Little about Harley Davidson

The story of Harley Davidson starts from the year 1902 when William S. Harley created a design for a 2 cylinder motorcycle. In the year 1903 William partnered with Arthur Davidson to assemble the first Harley Davidson motor cycle.

Harley Davidson motorcycles were made with the intention of being racing machines. In 1905 Harley Davidson won its first race. This victory marked the beginning of the history of success for Harley Davidson. By the year 1920 Harley Davidson became the most popular motorcycle producer in the world and Harley Davidson logo became very well recognized.

In 2003 Harley Davidson celebrated 100th anniversary. These 100 years tell a story of solid growth, success and the growing popularity of Harley Davidson motor cycles and Harley Davidson Logo

I love classic Motorcycles, records they have set and famous people "stars" that ride them. I love my mal-surfboard. Development has come a long way since their conception. My surfboards are varied and I love surfing some of the best waves in the world, lots of travel. My need for speed is satisfied by my Triumph Tiger 955i. Wow!

Classic Harley Davidson Motorcycles not Depressed.

Harley & Davidson's intention was to be dominant in racing and won its first race with a motorcycle that had a one cylinder combustion engine in 1905. The famous "Bar and Shield" logo was first used in 1910 and this further established the "brand" of Harley Davidson.

The fabulous sidecar outfit was developed by Harley Davidson Motorcycles in 1914 and their potential was realised by the U.S. military. Harley Davidson motorcycles and sidecars alike, saw service in WWI and interestingly half the Harley production was used by the military.

By 1920 Harley Davidson was the most popular of motorcycle producers in the world and were in over 65 different countries of the world.

When the depression hit, Harley Davidson, like all manufacturers of the time, had stay on top. It had to stimulate it's sales by offering something that was ground breaking. H.D. came up with the iconic "Eagle graphic". The Eagle, being most powerful, helped H.D. through the depression. It effectively put a new emphasis on graphic design, 'Personalised tank graphics'.

Harley-Davidson 100th Anniversary

© Peggy Hoehne

Articles in this Topic Discussions in this Topic

Sep 14, 2003

The time was 1903. The place was Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Four young men, William Harley, his friends Arthur and Walter Davidson, and later joined by William Davidson, began to experiment with internal combustion engines in a 10' by 15' wooden shed.

They were looking for a way to make bicycle riding easier. With the new horseless carriages just beginning to be seen, these young men came up with the idea to fit a smaller combustion engine to a bicycle. Many changes were made to the first design before they were satisfied.

In 1903 they produced three motorcycles. Henry Meyer of Milwaukee bought one of the 1903 models directly from his former schoolyard pals William Harley and Arthur Davidson. This was a one-cylinder motorcycle with gasoline combustion engine. The words "Harley-Davidson Motor Company" were written on the door of the shed where they worked.

Chicago merchant C. H. Lange, sold the first officially distributed Harley-Davidson. The first production Harley Davidson motorcycle was built to be a racer. That first motorcycle built by Harley-Davidson ran for over 100,000 miles and survived five owners.

Production began in that same shed in the backyard of the Davidson family home. In 1904 they were producing a 30 cubic inch (494cc) single which was nicknamed the Silent Gray Fellow.

By 1906 they had outgrown their backyard shed and moved to their first building at the current Juneau Avenue site and hired about 20 employees. Harley-Davidson incorporated in 1907, the same year a prototype V-twin motorcycle was built. 1907 also saw the first Harley-Davidsons sold for police duty. It went to the Detroit, Michigan, police department.

The V-twin engine was introduced in 1909. They produced the first 1000 CC V-Twin which produced seven horsepower. The two cylinders at a 45 degree angle was an enduring symbol of the Harley-Davidson motorcycle.

The famous "Bar and Shield" logo was introduced in 1910. It is the same symbol we all recognize today on all Harley motorcycles and Harley-Davidson biking gear.

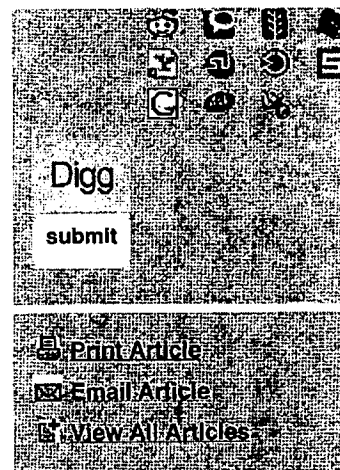

The next decades brought hard times and evolution to the young motorcycle company. They survived the depression of the 1930s, turned to exclusive war production during the early 1940s. They outlasted their American competition. Their greatest and last American competitor, the Indian, ceased production in 1953, the year the Harley-Davidson turned 50. They survived the British competition from the Triumph and in the coming years held out against the Japanese who were introducing lower priced motorcycles.

By 2003, the company was 100 years old and still "American Made". This summer the 100th Anniversary Open Road Tour brought enthusiasts together at the end of August in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, back where it all began. From all over the country the rumbles of Harleys centered on Milwaukee on August 27, 2003.

Peggy, this was so interesting reading about how motorcycles came to be and how Harley-Davidson has evolved through the years. Motorcycle riding is fun and I love to hear them rumble down the street ...

1920's Harley® generators - an overview

From: Perry Ruiter

In his excellent book on restoring VLs, Steve Slocombe claims that the Harley 32E generator "must be one of the best documented electrical parts of all time". Unfortunately, the same can not be said about the generators that preceded the 32E. I hope this article begins to shed some light on the generators Harley used prior to the 32E. The focus will be on JD generators used during the 1920's, with a discussion of the differences between each model and how to identify them, then some overhaul pointers. If there is interest, a subsequent installment could look at generators used on teens JDs, DLs and early VLs.

Generator models:

Harley Davidson began manufacturing their own generators in the latter part of the 1920 season (earlier generators had been supplied by Remy Electric). Between then and the end of the JD era (1929) four distinct models had been produced:

- Model A - later 1920, all 1921, and early 1922
- Model B - 1922 from motor number 9835 and all 1923
- Model C - 1924 and 1925
- Model D - 1926 - 1929 V twins (except 1929 45)
- Model D1 - 1926 - 1929 singles

The only difference between the model D and D1 generator is in the distributor drive helical gear on the armature. Generator internals are identical (even the armature itself is identical, just the helical gear pressed on the armature is different). Gear 1649-18 was used on twins and has four teeth. Gear 1648-26 was used on singles and has six teeth (gear 1648-30 also has six teeth and is used on 1930 - 1934 singles, but the ID of the gear is increased to accommodate the increased drive end armature shaft size). Since the model D and D1 generators are so similar, comments below referring to the model D also apply to the D1 unless explicitly stated otherwise.

Generator body and end plate:

The generator body and drive end plate are castings. There are two general styles of each with the model C being the change over. Model A and B body castings are "open" at the commutator end and have the commutator end bearing supported by the casting from the top and bottom. Model C and D body castings are "closed" at the commutator end and have the bearing supported from the center. The bodies have numbers cast into the bottom between the mounting platform. I have observed the following:

- Model A - 83-20A (presumably 83-20 also)
- Model B - 83-22 or 83-22A
- Model C - 83-24
- Model D - 83-26

Fourth mounting hole is drilled and tapped on the model Ds.

At the same time as the body casting style changed, the end plate casting (where the distributor mounts) also changed. Model A and B end plates, 1555-20, affix to the generator body with two screws. Model C and D end plates, 1555-24, use three screws. The screws, 1512-18, are the same screws used for pole shoes. Model A and B end plates use a grease cup to lubricate the timer shaft. Model C and later use a flat top Alemite grease fitting. The grease cup threads are 1/8 NPT. The grease fitting threads are 5/16-32. In all cases the threads for the timer base set screw, 1542-20, are 5/16-32.

Generator body tags:

http://www.harleydavidson.com/IDGeneratorsOverview.html

5/20/2000

Generator bodies had a small brass identification tag riveted onto one side. There may have been some overlap, but as a rule of thumb most generator models had their own unique style of tag. Model A tags differ completely from the Remy tags. Model B tags have the famous bar and shield logo along with a patent date. Model C and D tags are similar, but differ from Model B by no longer having a patent date on them (I've also observed a variant of the model C tag with a slightly different style of bar and shield logo). For the 1928 season tags were eliminated. 1928 and 1929 generators do not have tags.

Commutator end covers:

Here again 1924 was a change over year. Prior to 1924 the end covers have a J slot cut into the side for a set screw on the underside of the generator body. There are two styles of these early covers:

- "deep" end cap, 1696-18, used on 1918 - early 1922 (Remy 235 and Harley model A generators). These generators had a centrifugal cut out mounted on the end of the armature shaft. This cover is deeper to accommodate the cut out.
- "shallow" end cap, 1696-22, used on late 1922 - 1923, model B. By this time, the manual switch and buzzer assembly was being used as an external cut out replacing the centrifugal cut out. Depth of this end cap is 1 11/16 inches.

Model C and later commutator covers are held on with two small screws through the end of the cover. The primary difference between model C and early model D end covers is that the model C cover has a large square cut out of the bottom of it to accommodate the generator output wire clamp, 1744-24. The clamp was redesigned and moved to the underside of the generator on the model D's.

Sometime during the 1928 season an oiler cap was added to the commutator end cover. This is to get oil into the commutator end bearing without needing to remove the cover. The oiler was not a common Gits style flip up oiler, but rather the lid was held shut by a spring running up through the center of the oiler body. The addition of this oiler necessitated a running change to the left bearing cover, 1647-24. The part number never changed.

The final point worth noting before leaving commutator end covers is that the 1929 models had an external lever on the third brush plate. 1929 was the first year with an ammeter fitted as standard equipment. I assume the intent was that the ammeter would allow the rider, while underway, to reach down and adjust the output to match their needs. This is a one year only feature. So, in addition to the oiler, the end cover for the 1929 models had a notch in its edge to accommodate the lever and its movement.

Armatures:

Each model of generator had its own unique armature (save for the D and D1 which shared a common bare armature). The drive end of the armature shaft has a 5/16-18 left hand thread. 1653-18 is the left hand thread nut used to retain the drive gear (JDH models have a generator drive gear with a recess for the nut and require a different nut, 1653-28, but use the same left hand thread). The model A and B armatures are similar, but the shaft, at the commutator end, on the model A is different to accommodate the centrifugal cut out mounted there. The model C and D armatures are also similar. The difference is the length of the commutator. The model C commutator has an overall length of 11/16 of an inch and a 1/16 inch spacer on the end before the 1641-24 oil deflector. The model D commutator has an overall length of 3/4 of an inch and no spacer before the 1641-24 oil deflector.

Overhaul pointers:

Since the thread for the timer base set screw is not a standard thread it's fairly common to find end plates with these tapped oversize. As the end plate is cast, welding is not an easy repair. The usual fix in this case is tapping it well oversize and threading an insert in with the ID having the correct thread.

The armature is another area that often needs attention. The left hand threads on the drive end of the armature are often damaged. Building the area up with weld and turning new threads has proven a successful method of repair.

To properly test an armature a growler is required, but a couple preliminary tests can be done with just an ohmmeter. Verify the commutator (copper bars on end) is isolated from the shaft. Also go around the commutator bar to bar verifying the resistance between any two adjacent bars does not exceed 1 ohm. Do not fear if your armature fails the tests. They can be rewound. Even the commutator can be replaced if it is badly damaged.

The bearings used at either end of the armature are number 201 (modern number 6201) which is a standard bearing size available just about everywhere. You'll likely get a permanently lubed and sealed bearing which is a nice upgrade.

In general field coils are much more likely than the armature to still be serviceable. All generators prior to 1930 had the pair of field coils joined together internally by twisting and soldering a bare wire from each together. The ohm reading for the pair of field coils should be around 4.0 ohms (plus or minus a few tenths of an ohm). Also make sure the ohm reading between the field coils and the generator body is infinity (eg: the coils are completely isolated from the generator body). Under the twisted and soldered field coil joint is connection insulator, 1515-20, which is a piece of insulating paper 1 1/2 by 3 inches. This often becomes aged and brittle and it may be damaged or partially missing. If your field coils are not isolated from the generator body this is a likely cause. I always replace it with a new piece of armature slot paper, but any none conductive material should work. End cover insulation, 1697-26, is also a piece of insulating paper. It is 7/8 by 11 1/4 inches and fits inside the end cover to insure it does not short against the brushes or brush holders.

When facing the commutator end of the generator, the lead from the right hand field coil is connected to the third brush (the adjustable one in the "top middle"). The lead from the left hand field coil is connected to the positive (left hand) brush. The right hand brush is the negative brush and it's brush holder should be grounded.

NOS brushes can still be found for all models. A surprising source of brushes for the 1926 - 1931 models are the Accel brush sets for 32Es (Accel part number 192302). They have been mistakenly produced in the earlier style. No doubt Accel will correct this eventually, but I've used several sets over the past year in model D generators. These should be available through (or even in stock at) most chopper shops.

For model A and B generators the output wire exits the generator through a cable bushing (1742-18 for model A and 1742-22 for model B). This cable bushing is made from some type of plastic or phenolic. They are threaded into the generator body and care should be exercised removing and cleaning them. They are easy to damage.

The bodies and end plates are finished in black paint. Small hardware is either nickel (Alemite fitting, timer base set screw), cad (grease cup) or parkerized (screws, etc.).

Replacement brass tags are now readily available for all models.

I hope this summary of my notes has proven helpful. I'm always interested in learning more, so please contact me with questions, corrections, suggestions or new information.

Wild At Heart

FULL STORY

Independence and adventure rumble at the heart of the Harley-Davidson legend, says Johnny Acton. Its motorcycles are one of only a few products that appeal to rebellious outlaws and straight-laced businessmen alike. But how did Harley-Davidson build this iconic status, and what is the world's most famous motorcycle manufacturer doing to protect its brand?

In 1903, to paraphrase the official website of the most famous motorcycle manufacturer on earth: a rumble emerged from a shed in Milwaukee that would be heard around the world. After months of tinkering, 21-year-old William S Harley and his friends the Davidson brothers (Arthur, Walter and William), were finally ready to unveil the first Harley-Davidson motorcycle. The carburettor was made from a tomato can.

It may have become an advertising cliché to claim that a product is not just a purchase but a lifestyle. In the case of Harley-Davidson, for once that rhetoric is justified. The allegiance of enthusiasts to the brand is tribal, verging on religious. The Harley Owners Group (HOG) has some 900,000 members worldwide, and rallies regularly attract attendance figures equivalent to the population of a medium-sized town.

Although the brand's appeal transcends national boundaries, it can be summed up in a sentence – the Harley-Davidson bike is the American Dream on wheels. It is imbued with a spirit of freedom and individuality, qualities close to the nation's heart. And that goes a long way towards accounting for the bikes' popularity.

Another key factor is patriotism. The Harley brand has been intimately entwined with US history for more than a century. It provided thousands of Americans with their first taste of motorcycling, many on the battlefield. (The manufacturers supplied the US Army with some 110,000 machines during the two world wars.) Success in a military context earned the bikes an unrivalled reputation for reliability and efficiency. During the post-war era, the Harley-Davidson Motor Company, then the sole American motorcycle manufacturer, became a focus for patriotic feelings as it faced the onslaught of motorcycle rivals from overseas.

The Harley-Davidson brand's iconic status in America is reflected by its prominence in the media: Elvis Presley had a fleet of Harleys; Schwarzenegger, Springsteen, Eastwood and Stallone, as symbols of American masculinity, own them as a matter of course; Malcolm Forbes gave Elizabeth Taylor a purple one; and Dan Ackroyd drove one at the head of John Belushi's funeral cortege. Meanwhile, through films like Easy Rider (1969) and The Wild One (1953), Hollywood has forged an indelible link in the public imagination between Harley-Davidson and rebellious free-spiritedness.

THE HARLEY BRAND HAS BEEN INTIMATELY ENTWINED WITH US HISTORY FOR MORE THAN A CENTURY. IT PROVIDED THOUSANDS OF AMERICANS WITH THEIR FIRST TASTE OF MOTORCYCLING, MANY ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

As the link with movie-stars and rock-legends suggests, the Harley-Davidson motorcycle manages simultaneously to be a symbol of both counter-culture and the establishment. It is the vehicle of choice for the rebellious outlaw and traffic cop alike. This paradox is central to Harley-Davidson's success, but it needs to be managed extremely carefully. Following a management buyout in 1981, the owners were faced with the delicate task of exploiting the brand's enormous marketing potential, without alienating a clientele likely to be turned off by overt commercialism. They succeeded spectacularly – today they market clothing, watches and cafés, while retaining the loyalty of millions of hardcore bikers.

Not surprisingly, the Harley-Davidson Motor Company has jealously guarded its IPR from the outset, including the famous 'bar and shield' logo (registered in 1911) and the teardrop-shaped fuel tank featured on all models since 1925. At the time of writing, the Company held 263 US trademarks.

Thus far, however, it has failed in its most audacious application, namely to register the distinctive 'potato potato potato' noise made by an idling Harley engine. In 2000, Harley-Davidson finally withdrew its trademark application after a six-year legal battle with a group of rival manufacturers. But although the courts proved sympathetic to the coalition's contention that all motorcycles sound much the same, any enthusiast will tell you that nothing sounds like a Harley.

American Car Imports Promote the 2008 Ford F-150 Super Crew Harley-Davidson 105th Anniversary Edition

2008 sees the continuation of the joint venture between Harley-Davidson and Ford with the 105th anniversary edition F150 Pick Up Truck. With the use of very high quality materials, subtle design cues and the 105th anniversary color schemes, this is one truck that is sure to please fans of both Ford and Harley-Davidson.

London, United Kingdom, April 23, 2008 --(PR.com)-- American Car Imports in London one of the UK's leading American vehicle importers are promoting the new 2008 Ford F-150 Harley Davidson 105th anniversary edition pick up truck.

For the 105th anniversary of Harley-Davidson the Ford and Harley-Davidson collaboration goes from strength to strength with the launch of the 2008 F150 super crew Harley Davidson Edition Pick Up Truck.

The truck is offered with the standard 300-hp 5.4L Triton V8 engine or by special order a supercharged version by Saleen producing 450 hp and 500 ft-lbs. of torque.

The 2008 F-150 HD is available with two-wheel drive or all-wheel drive, the exterior color choices are Black with custom striping or a new Black and Vintage Copper two-tone. Selecting this version gives you leather-trimmed seats which continue the Black and Copper color theme and are accented by piano black trims on the centre console with a repeating pattern of Harley-Davidson's famous bar-and-shield logo.

To an already high specification truck the Harley-Davidson Package adds a host of additional equipment specific to the vehicle such as unique Harley-Davidson fender and tailgate badges and the unique 22" x 9" polished forged aluminum wheels with P275/45VR22 Pirelli tires. The F150 has always been a best seller and now with this years model Ford have improved the quality of all the materials used, from the interior to the exterior. The result is a top of the range pick up with a ride like quality similar to an SUV rather than a truck.

There has always been a natural affinity with Harley Davidson motorcycle owners and the owners of the Harley Davidson pick up truck and American Car Imports of London have had close ties with Harley-Davidson in the UK with exclusive arrangements on advertising in the Harley owners publications and are known to be the specialists for this range of vehicles.

'Many eyes' watch for Harley counterfeits

By: By Heidi Bell Gease, Journal staff
August, 07 2007

A word of advice when shopping at the Sturgis Motorcycle Rally: If it seems too good to be true, it is.

Even if it says "Harley-Davidson," a leather jacket marked $50 or a belt buckle priced at $5 is sure to be a counterfeit, company spokesmen say. "The best advice we can give is to buy from an authorized dealer or buy from a Harley-Davidson dealer," said Kevin McPherson, who works in trademark enforcement for the Harley-Davidson Motor Company.

As any motorcycle enthusiast knows, Harley-Davidson merchandise has become enormously popular over the past 20 years. Licensed dealers sell everything from dog collars to coffee, all marked with the famous bar-and-shield Harley logo.

As a result, more people are trying to cash in on the Harley-Davidson name by selling knock-offs of Harley clothing, jewelry and other items. Unwitting shoppers looking for bargains at the Sturgis Motorcycle Rally may be duped into buying something they think is genuine, only to find out it's a cheap copy.

Motorcycle rallies like Sturgis are prime territory for counterfeit goods, which is why Harley-Davidson sends trademark enforcement people to all major bike rallies -- including Daytona and Laconia -- as well as some smaller rallies, McPherson said.

Three former Sturgis vendors know that now.

In two separate cases pending in federal court, three men have pleaded guilty to federal charges for selling fake Harley-Davidson merchandise at last year's Sturgis Rally.

Peter Liu, 44, Apple Valley, Calif., was arrested Aug. 10, after U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, or ICE agents seized 128 purses, 277 shirts and 245 pins, along with cash, money orders and business documents, from a kiosk in Sturgis on Third Street between Main and Lazelle and a semitrailer.

That same day, Stephen Tronolone, no age available, and Michael Johnson, also known as Kori Johnson, no age available, both of Crestview, Fla., were arrested at The Ride Bell Company, 1053 Main St. in Sturgis. Officers seized more than 100 necklaces, 100 charms and 500 rings, along with bracelets, earrings, body jewelry, cash, ledgers and nine counterfeit Harley merchandise from their booth and two pickup trucks.

These are the first Rally-related counterfeit cases Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Vargo remembers prosecuting. But that doesn't mean Liu, Tronolone and Johnson were the only vendors selling fake goods.

The first thing Harley representatives do when they find counterfeit goods "in the field" is talk to the vendor and send him with a civil cease-and-desist letter, which demands that the vendor quit selling the goods, surrender them voluntarily and promise not to sell counterfeit goods in the future.

"If they comply with our demands, then we'll basically consider the matter closed at that point," McPherson said. "We want to get the goods off the street so they're not in the hands of our consumers."

If a vendor refuses to comply, he or she is "introduced" to law enforcement officers, McPherson said. "In most situations it's a felony offense."

Last year's Sturgis cases were handled by ICE agents. ICE is a division of the Department of Homeland Security that investigates criminal violations of federal laws that protect trademarks and other "intellectual property."

Some cases -- especially cases where a vendor promised to stop selling counterfeit goods, then continued to do so -- go to court. They can result in jail time, restitution, fines and/or probation.

ICE spokesman Tim Counts said ICE agents often work with company representatives but also investigate tips from the public and from other law enforcement agencies.

And sometimes, getting caught with counterfeit goods is only the beginning of the seller's problems.

"It's not uncommon for us to combine immigration and customs law enforcement in one case," Counts said. If a vendor is in the country illegally or is here legally but becomes deportable as a result of a criminal conviction, he or she can end up being deported.

That happens after any criminal proceedings are finished. "We feel if somebody has committed a law violation, the consequence shouldn't only be a free trip home," Counts said. "They need to do the time for the crime first."

Do customers turn in people selling counterfeit goods?

"All the time," McPherson said with a chuckle. So do Harley dealers, regional managers and HOG (Harley Owners Group) members -- "anyone in the known universe, pretty much," he said. "We have many eyes in the field."

They include licensed Harley-Davidson dealers like Al Rieman, president of Black Hills Harley-Davidson Corp.

"We see some of it, and the basic responsibility we have as a dealer is to bring it to the Motor Company's attention," Rieman said, adding that Harley-Davidson routinely holds seminars to show dealers how to identify counterfeit goods. Sometimes, the goods are real, but the vendor isn't licensed to sell it. That can be hard to trace, Rieman said.

Rieman also sees people who have modified a licensed Harley-Davidson product in a way that violates trademark law. For example, a Harley sign made into a clock. Many people don't know that although that's okay for your own use, it's illegal to sell.

Counterfeit goods hurt the company in several ways. They take sales away from businesses that have invested in training and other requirements of being a licensed dealer.

Perhaps more importantly, they reflect badly on the Harley-Davidson brand name.

"Typically, the stuff that I've seen that's counterfeit is inferior quality," Rieman said. "I've never seen anything worth going back to look at it twice."

"When you have a lot of substandard products in the marketplace bearing our trademark, obviously it could affect people's view of our brand," McPherson agreed.

And if a company knows about trademark and copyright violations but doesn't do anything about them, the company runs the risk of losing legal ownership of the brand. In other words, "Harley-Davidson" could become a generic term.

"That's something we absolutely cannot have," McPherson said.

Trademark violations happen everywhere. Part of McPherson's job is monitoring eBay for counterfeit Harley goods. As a representative of the trademark owner, he can cancel any auction.

"At any given moment, there are over 100,000 auctions on eBay that have Harley-Davidson in the title," he said. "It's one of the largest brands on eBay."

As for the Sturgis counterfeit vendors, all three defendants were indicted on felony charges of trafficking in counterfeit goods.

goods. Tronolone and Johnson pleaded guilty to that charge in mid July. Liu pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor criminal infringement on copyright.

Trafficking in counterfeit goods, which carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine. Copy infringement is punishable by one year in prison and a $100,000 fine.

Classic Motorcycle Harley Davidson | Depressed

News Type: Other — Wed Oct 31, 2007 9:17 AM EDT

classicmotorcycles

Harley & Davidson's intention was to be dominant in racing and won its first race with a one cylinder combustion engine in 1905.

The famous "Bar and Shield" was first used in 1910 and this further established the "brand" of Harley Davidson.

The fabulous side car outfit was developed by Harley Davidson in 1914 and their potential was realised by the military. Harleys, bikes and sidecars alike saw service in WWI and interestingly half the Harley production was used by the military.

By 1920 Harley Davidson was the most popular of motor cycle producers in the world and were in over 65 different countries of the world.

When the depression hit, Harley, like all manufacturers of the time, had stay on top.

It had to stimulate it's sales by offering something that was ground breaking. H.D. came up with the iconic Eagle graphic. The Eagle, being most powerful, helped H.D. through the depression. It effectively put a new emphasis on design, 'Personalised tank graphics'.

2008 Ford F-150 Harley Davidson 105th anniversary edition

American Car Imports in London have the new 2008 Ford F-150 Harley Davidson 105th anniversary edition in stock, available to view.

American Car Imports works as an independent importer, importing all models of F150 for specific customers in the UK .

It's now the 105th anniversary and the Ford and Harley -Davidson collaboration goes from strength to strength, this is the best version yet.

The truck is offered with the standard 300-hp 5.4L Triton V8 engine or by special order a supercharged version by Saleen producing 450 hp and 500 ft-lbs. of torque.

The truck is covered with badges commemorating the occasion. The 2008 F-150 HD is available as a SuperCrew 4x2 or with all-wheel drive, the exterior color choices are monochromatic black treatment with custom striping or a new "Black and Vintage Copper" two-tone. Selecting this version gives you leather-trimmed seats which continue the black and copper colour theme and are accented by piano black trims on the centre console with a repeating pattern of Harley-Davidson's famous bar-and-shield logo.
